THE OREGON TRAIL

Explore food frontiers at Lewis + Clark Restaurant BY WILLIAM KENNEDY

Step into Lewis + Clark Restaurant, a catering service turned full-time brick 'n' mortar restaurant on Martin Luther King Boulevard Jr. Boulevard in Eugene you're greeted with a chalkboard reading: "Welcome to Our Humble Abode."

On a nearby wall hang framed photos of Bill Murray, Richard Pryor, Jean-Paul Sartre and many others. "Those are people that I like," says owner Anthony Parshall. "They've done great things, so if we can bring some of that innovative and entertaining energy, I think that would be great."

All this, as well as a pool table, kids area, full bar and killer views of Alton Baker Park's ponds and waterways gives Lewis + Clark a down-to-earth yet classy vibe. The location is also ridiculously convenient for Autzen Stadium foot traffic during Duck football season.

Parshall is a veteran chef in local kitchens and catering services. "I can manifest something from the interior and make it happen," Parshall says, "play with colors, play with shapes." He admits he's meat-centric, but his restaurant isn't.

"What we're trying to do is an eclectic menu: classic comfort food," Parshall continues.

At Lewis + Clark, build your own burger from the burger bar. You can make your patty classic, spicy Cajun style or choose from turkey or chicken, among many others.

Next, pick from a list of cheeses (cheddar, chevre or gruyere, for example) and toppings ranging from potato chips to remoulade. Add-ons include fried egg, avocado and sautéed mushrooms.

Parshall's front-of-house manager Molly Hinson says Lewis + Clark aims to remain accessible. "Everything is $20 and under," she says. "I don't believe you should have to break the bank to have a nice meal."

And Lewis + Clark's extensive, locally sourced and seasonal menu goes beyond burgers to hot wings, pasta, vegan gardener's pie and a dish simply called "Meat and Taters" (grilled bistro steak topped with wild mushroom demi).

Both Hinson and Parshall emphasize their desire for Lewis + Clark to be welcoming for everyone: a foodie destination, a sports bar with white tablecloths or a place for couples with kids to have a date night without a babysitter to dine while the kids play in the play area.

"We're about the diversity," Hinson says. "We have a private party room here, we have a lot of holiday parties. Anyone can come in and feel that non-judgment."

"It becomes like a conversation that we're having," Parshall adds. "We're together, creating this experience."

Lewis + Clark Restaurant is located at 2210 Martin Luther King Boulevard in Eugene. It's open for dinner service Tuesday through Saturday 5:30 pm to close. For more information and a full menu go to lewisandclarkeugene.com.

TRUCK DREAMS

Authentic Mexican Food at
Dos Banderas BY MARSHA BOUTELLE

The aroma of smoky mesquite lures your nostrils around the corner of West Broadway onto Olive Street, to Dos Banderas, the little food truck that could — and does — deliver the most authentic-recipe tacos, giant burritos, quesadillas and more for those craving that rarest of things in Eugene: Mexican food that is truly outstanding.

Tucked into an alley between The Davis and Luckey's Club, this family-run food truck attracts not only locals and students, but even out-of-towners who've been tipped off to tasting the freshly made, lime-juice-infused guacamole, the to-die-for mozzarella-and-jack-cheese quesadillas (that can also be had with mesquite-grilled chicken or steak) or the enormous taco salad loaded with pinto beans, cheese, veggies, smoked meat if you choose, tomatoes, avocado, romaine lettuce and a base of fresh-tasting tortilla chips.

Other choices include Mexican and American breakfast offerings, like breakfast burritos, or bacon and eggs with hash browns. Also, since Dos Banderas is open until 3 am on Thursday through Saturday nights, the place has become a favorite for late-night denizens leaving the bar scene hungry for something delicious.

Six years ago, José Ojeda says he decided to turn his passion for good food learned in his mother's kitchen in Zacatecas, Mexico, into a business of his own. Over the years, he'd worked as a cook in chain-restaurant kitchens, where he honed his chops but never got to make his kind of food.

"I hadn't seen restaurants in Eugene that made authentic Mexican food," Ojeda says. "There was nothing that was really good."

So Ojeda bought a food truck, and with the help of his wife and adult children, embarked on his dream of crafting food his way.

As word got around, his business began to thrive: "Business is good," Ojeda says. "Every year has been different. Bars and businesses have opened up around the areas that have brought people in. And every year when school starts, students keep finding us, too."

Wife Minerva Ojeda, daughter Daisy and son José Jr., along with Daisy's boyfriend, Andres Lara, work long hours feeding, what are sometimes hordes of hungry people at lunchtime and late at night.

Every dish is made from scratch.

"We try our best to be authentic," Ojeda says. "We just wanted to bring that authentic Mexican style of cooking to Eugene."

Dos Banderas is open 10:30 am - 6 pm Monday - Wednesday, and 10:30 am - 3 am, Friday and Saturday, at 94 W. Broadway, in Eugene.

DIVINE SIMPLICITY

Keeping it easy and authentic at Springfield's Hayden Bridge Tap House BY ANNA GRACE

The Hayden Bridge Tap House is full of happy customers on a Friday evening. Multiple screens flicker with basketball games, and classic rock is urging us to sing along. But there must be some sort of acoustic magic happening, because my husband and I can still hear each other over it all. We sip a heartwarming stout as an enormous serving of fresh, veggie-topped nachos sits between us. Overall, we find ourselves in a comfortable and comforting place to have a beer and a meal.

The Torres family, Jose, Carima and their son Louie, opened Hayden Bridge Tap House last spring off Mohawk Boulevard in Springfield. The Douglas-fir slab tables, poured concrete bar and metal sheeting give a nod to the surrounding community's roots.

According to Carima Torres, "We handpick every beer we have on tap, we taste everything to test for quality and keep our customer base in mind when choosing our beers." She says, "All together we have 50 taps, two craft sodas for minors, seven hard ciders, three nitro taps, two kombuchas and the rest are all beers. All of our taps rotate so there are different beers and ciders all the time."

In contrast, the menu is intentionally brief: tacos, torta, nachos and maybe chili if you hit the menu on the right night. This has allowed the Torres family to focus on the beer and a few delicious items, rather than getting bogged down in a vast and changing assortment of trend-conscious meals.

Condiments are confined to a bottle of Tapatio on the table. "Our recipes are based on real Mexican street food," Torres says. "We've gotten amazing compliments from customers that our tacos remind them of when they lived in L.A., or when they were in Mexico or Arizona."

What's the best part of running a tap house?

"We've gotten to know so many new people that have become amazing friends," Torres says.

You can feel that sentiment the moment you walk in, that this is a good family eager to include you in a circle of customers enjoying authentic Mexican street food and great beer.

The Hayden Bridge Tap House is at 1910 Marcola Road in Springfield, 541-844-2300. Hours are Monday through Wednesday noon to 9 pm, Thursday through Saturday noon to 10 pm, Sundays noon to 7 pm.

'We handpick every beer we have on tap, we taste everything to test for quality and keep our customer base in mind when choosing our beers.'

NORTH- WESTWARD EXPANSION

Rain Northwest brings finer dining to west Eugene BY ANDY VALENTINE

For years the building at 1190 City View Street housed a dowdy local Mexican favorite named Nacho's Restaurant, and for years the building blended right in: Complete with faux-adobe walls and a waifish, grinning hombre caricature, the restaurant had everything we'd come to expect of Eugene's longest strip mall on 11th west of Chambers.

Three miles of golden arches, Jacks in Boxes and Fourthmeal fug: The problem here is visibility. On a drag characterized by corporate marketing, where international brands are jammed down our throats like so many flavorless fastfood fries, how best to polish the local gems and let them outshine those big-money lights?

For Tracie Shojai, co-owner of Rain Northwest, a focus on fun is an absolute must.

When Nacho's closed its doors in 2014, Shojai, who owns the building along with her husband, had a difficult time renting out the space. After some deliberation, they decided to open their own restaurant — one that filled an obvious gap in the west Eugene food scene.

"There's really nothing on this side of town," Shojai says. "That was a lot of the impetus, because we live over here. When we designed [Rain Northwest] we really wanted it to be a fun place — my husband and I like going out, and there aren't a lot of restaurants where you can go out and hang out and have a fun atmosphere, and really feel like you're out on the town."

To this end, Shojai and her husband have succeeded. The atmosphere inside Rain Northwest is sleek and welcoming, without all the harsh, square lines of modernity that so often cold-up your bog-standard bistro. A scratch-bar complete with dazzling cocktail list awaits the diner just inside, and the tables are spaced in such a way that the dining experience retains that cozy, urban feel without the tinned-sardine claustrophobia.

When you share a parking lot with an Applebee's, though, atmosphere is just one part of the equation. Rain Northwest sources its ingredients from local farms and vendors, which is all well and good, but preparation is the true priority. Shojai says great care was taken in choosing a refined, experienced and collaborative kitchen staff to bring these quality ingredients to life.

"A lot of smaller restaurants thrive on local and organic, but this is a larger dinner place," she says. "Our chefs have a lot of leeway and rotating specials to work with. They love it because they don't get bored."

This creativity is immediately recognizable after a glance at Rain Northwest's menu. Whether it's smoked pork chops with apples and shallot butter, coq au vin with goat cheese polenta, or even a sorrel and roasted beet dip, you'd be hard-pressed to find a more idiosyncratic menu in town. At $25-$30 per entrée, it's a pricier, yet more perfect place to paint the town red. Shojai explains that the higher prices are largely due to ingredient costs. She sees sacrificing quality as a big no-no.

"People have given up eating vegetables and trying new things," she says. "They're so used to processed foods. If people are going to invest in us, we want to invest in them. They're making the choice to put high-quality food in their tummies, so we want to fulfill that need."

The foodie sensibility can be lacking in west Eugene, and Rain Northwest may just be a pioneer. So the next time you're slogging your way through the strip, drawn like a moth to the pyrite lights, consider heeding your body's opinion. After an evening at Rain Northwest, I guarantee your stomach will thank you.

Rain Northwest is open for dinner six days a week from 4:30 to 9 pm Tuesday through Thursday, 4:30 to 11 pm Friday and Saturday and 4:30 to 9 pm Sunday. For pricing and rotating specials, visit rainnw.com.

GROWING CONCERN

Yep Yep Farm fights to stay organic BY VANESSA SALVIA

Jason Waligoske and his wife, Louisa Waligoske, are farmers.

They have a dilapidated collection of outbuildings and greenhouses on the 4.6-acre former plant nursery site in Dexter they purchased two years ago. The couple battles poison oak while tending greens and tomatoes and checking their water lines. They use amendments listed as acceptable by Organic Materials Review Institute (OMRI). They're organic farmers, right?

They think so, but a bureaucratic movement might change that.

"Large organic soil farmers are lobbying for a change to organic regulations," Jason Waligoske says. "They see farms like ours as a threat to their profits."

The Waligoskes practice aquaponics and aquaculture. Water in four 1,000-gallon tanks holding tilapia flows through an interconnected system of troughs holding 4,000 to 5,000 plants and 6,500 gallons of water. The only inputs are fish food pellets for the tilapia, an air pump and a water pump. Nutrient-rich water from the fish tanks, with the fish droppings filtered out, is pumped into the plant troughs to feed the plants and is then re-circulated into the fish tanks.

Though the Waligoskes have yet to eat any of their tilapia, the fish can eventually be harvested.

"The only additive we use is a little bit of ferrous sulfate because the groundwater is naturally low in iron," Jason Waligoske says. "We use the OMRI-listed organic SaferGro brand. This way of growing can be done in a totally humane, sustainable way, that's good for the environment."

"Seventy-five gallons a day for 4,000 plants," Louisa Waligoske adds. "We only use about 5 percent of the water that soil agriculture does."

Jason Waligoske owns New Frontier Market in Eugene, which is a big outlet for the couple's produce. Last year, Louisa Waligoske says, they grew everything a soil farm could grow for a farmstand, including root crops and tomatoes.

They have 100 chicks and will be selling eggs by April. They plan to build a "food forest" with fruit trees, worm composting and mobile coops for ducks and chickens.

'At some point I had the realization that if I was ever going to change the world I would have to work from within society.'

— JASON WALIGOSKE

This year, they're going to try vertical strawberries. Since tilapia is a tropical fish, they might switch to trout.

"We can reduce our energy use even further because trout don't mind cold, unheated water," Louisa Waligoske says.

The fish water supports a variety of microgreens. "Sunflower, pea, broccoli, radish, daikon, cress and cilantro," she says. As of now, their microgreens, nasturtium blossoms and the juiciest, lemoniest sorrel are their specialties.

One of the misunderstandings of aquaculture is that aquaponics plants are grown in GMO sludge. "Not true," Jason Waligoske says. "But a soil farm can still be considered organic if it uses conventional chicken manure from birds that are fed GMOs."

Not to mention, he says, plastic mulches and irrigation systems can leach harmful PCBs and other contaminants into soil.

Oregon Tilth certifies the farm's produce, including chickens, and Jason Waligoske wants that to continue.

Aquaponic produce and hydroponics can be certified when done organically and proven, but there is no U.S. certification for fish or aquaculture. Animals grown for consumption, with the exception of aquatic animals, do have a certification in the U.S. Certifying boards will follow whatever standard the National Organic Standards Board votes to accept for aquaponics and aquaculture. "We know information about this was put in front of NOSB in November, and they're supposed to keep thinking about it," Jason Waligoske says.

In December, Jason Waligoske met with the Organically Grown Company. He says Organically Grown was helpful, and will continue to consider Yep Yep's products, but are reluctant to stock aquaponic produce until the NOSB says that it can continue to be certified.

Jason Waligoske says he was disillusioned with society as a teenager. The Rainbow Family lifestyle resonated with him, so he chose to drop out and live in the woods, backpacking, hitchhiking and traveling. "At some point I had the realization that if I was ever going to change the world I would have to work from within society," he says.

Fighting to keep aquaculture organic could be the way he does it.

THE AUTHOR'S DAUGHTER MARGARET WITH HER CHICKENS

“If we had a cow,” my daughter said, hope resonant in her voice, “we wouldn’t have to go to the store at all.”

We are not getting a cow. Our family is already scrambling and busy without the addition of milking anything.

But Margaret was right. With our garden, the chickens, staples from Hummingbird Wholesale, home canning and the freezer full of meat, we have everything on hand that we eat regularly, with the exception of milk products.

And I do really hate going to the store.

My husband and I didn’t get up one morning and suddenly decide to adopt a 100-mile diet, with an emphasis on our own produce.

As eaters, we’re just not that ambitious. But a slow process of thoughtful bulk buying, gardening, preserving and storing had yielded a nearly self-sufficient kitchen.

When I’d thought of local diets and self-sufficiency in the past, I imagined stalwart food fundamentalists, growing overly thin on a diet of amaranth and dried zucchini. But in Lane County, farms and retailers make it not only easy to eat local, but cost effective and endlessly delicious.

LOCAL, HUMANELY RAISED MEAT

Negotiating the morality of being an omnivore is challenging. But look closely and you will find farms humanely raising meat throughout the Willamette Valley: Deck Family Farm, Fair Valley Farm and Living Earth Farm to name a few.

We buy half a cow from Knee Deep Cattle Company. I love chatting with the farmer who owns the place as I pick up our beef at their family home and barn, just across Lorane Highway from where next year’s cattle are grazing.

Bulk meat takes advance financial planning, but saves considerable money. In the past we have split bulk orders with friends and family. Today, two secondhand freezers stand in our carport, holding summer produce and meat.

Buying half or a quarter of a cow will stretch your creativity. It’s not all steaks and ground beef. I’ve come across cuts of meat I’d never heard of. A package of kidneys comes with the deal. Tail is actually delicious.

4-H meat is another way to ensure the animal you are eating had a nice home and a name. After the 4-H summer fair, local businesses buy the kids’ livestock, and then sell it to the public. We have purchased a 4-H hog at 4-Star Meat Company with yummy results.

LOCAL GRAINS AND OTHER STAPLES

Every year in late August, we make a large bulk order at Hummingbird Wholesale. They carry Camas Mill’s local grains and legumes, along with other staples like honey. Hummingbird has a storefront with smaller portions of these locally harvested staples, but I go for the 50 lb. bags.

Having these staples on hand ensures we eat them regularly. Rather than thinking, “I ought to serve more black beans,” I simply cook up the black beans we have. Instead of running to the store for pasta, I experiment by serving polenta. Most of our staples are stored in 5-gallon buckets with Gamma lids (found at WinCo). Miller moths, mice and weevils are no match for these lids, and they are easy to open when a human wants some grain.

AREA FRUIT FARMS

We live in a glorious valley for fruit production. My little hamster trail of you-pick produce takes me out to J and M Farms for strawberries, Green-Hill-Aire for blueberries, Detering Orchards for peaches and Gravenstein apples that make the most decadent applesauce, Thistledown for random fruit runs, friends’ backyards for plums and pears. I think fully half the calories my son consumes in the summer come from the tenacious blackberries encroaching on our property.

There is more dirt and fewer chemicals to wash away on the fruit we gather. The energy spent drying, canning and freezing in the summer is paid back all winter long, in smoothies, oatmeal, on top of pancakes or straight out of the jar.

PLANT A BIG GARDEN, OR COMMIT TO A CSA BOX, AND EAT EVERYTHING

“This one produces ‘armloads of solid, crisp fruit ...’” my husband Jeff reads from the seed packet of cucumbers. We are standing in the back room at Down to Earth in early February, to plan for a harvest that won’t hit full swing for another half a year.

“Armloads?” I confirm. “That’s the one for us.”

Fast forward seven months and we are standing in the kitchen, cucumbers covering every surface, recipes for gazpacho and tzatziki open and resting on top of the produce. An ill-fated pickle project is in my way, just starting to smell funny. I consider taking a few “armloads” of cucumbers back to Down to Earth.

Committing to eat everything you grow takes a special kind of grit in the beginning. After a while the chaos of abundance becomes normal. I stopped planning meals in advance, and started walking down to the garden to find out what was for dinner. Recipes became less strict. This soup calls for two red peppers? How about ten?

If your home does not allow for a garden, CSA boxes produce roughly the same results, without the aphids. Participating farms pack up a box for you each week with whatever is going nuts in their soil. The Willamette Farm & Food Coalition is a brilliant help for someone starting on this journey and further information can be found at lanefood.org/find-local-food/csa-programs.

As I write this in early January, I sit in a kitchen with squash piled up in a corner, ropes of chilies, garlic and shallots hanging from the ceiling, an army of home-canned fruit lining the shelves behind me.

We’ve learned that locavore life isn’t about sacrifice and self-congratulation. It’s about the comfort of a delicious meal provided by the hands of our neighbors and the land that we live on.

Jeff and I started down this road of local food in pursuit of deliciousness. Looking back we see a small but satisfying little dent in our family’s carbon footprint, minimizing the miles our food traveled and the miles we traveled to get it.

Now all we need is a cow.

CREATIVITY IN A CONE OR A DISH

If you've ever thought that the picture-perfect ice cream scoops at Red Wagon Creamery deserved to be on the Food Network, you were right. And now they are. Film crews visited Red Wagon Creamery and their neighbors at Party Downtown on Saturday, Jan. 7, during the snow and ice storm. Diners were undeterred. "We had seats for 42 and 42 people showed," says Red Wagon owner Stuart Phillips.

The Red Wagon team revived Russian Meteorite, a winter favorite from the past. Imagine beets roasted in vodka with fudge swirls and malted milk balls. "It turns into this beautiful pink color," Phillips says. "You get a nice earthy taste and then you add a 72-percent cacao chocolate for the chocolate flavor and a little bitterness. It's a very nice way to use something that is still in season."

Another seasonal flavor happening right now is sweet potato casserole. Roasted sweet potatoes and candy cap mushrooms, for a slight maple flavor, are combined with toasted house-made marshmallow to give eaters the taste of the Thanksgiving table mainstay. "Root vegetables are still around in January and we definitely want to encourage farmers to keep growing these things," Phillips says with a laugh. "We can't just give them a market for corn and strawberries. It's all about biodiversity man, biodiversity!" — Vanessa Salvia

SPICE UP THE ORDINARY WITH PICKLES AND CITRUS

Tacovore specializes in taking ingredients you wouldn't think of putting in tacos and somehow making them delicious. Normal ingredients such as cauliflower or calamari are made unusual by taco-fying them. Throughout the winter, the menu makes a star of ingredients such as blood orange, which is used as a marinade as well as in a blood orange cocktail, and the new "it" ingredient, cauliflower.

"We pickle the cauliflower instead of roasting it," says Tacovore owner Steve Mertz. "We slice it and do a quick pickle with it." That goes into their calamari taco.

The Herbivore taco is always a showcase for seasonal ingredients, such as butternut squash, which in this case is served with Brussels sprouts, black beans, pickled red onions, cilantro, cotija cheese and roasted pepitas. Right now, citrus is big on the menu. "In the winter citrus comes through," Mertz says. "That's when we use oranges, satsumas, blood oranges and clementines, too. The carnitas taco (pork), which we always have, has citrus in it right now. We try to find seasonal fruits that we can juice in terms of squeezing it out for a seasonal margarita, too." —

SEASONAL SLOW ROASTING BRINGS OUT WINTER'S FLAVORS

Winter is the time to turn on the oven and cook things for a long time. That's what Maurizio Paparo does in his kitchens at Excelsior Inn and Restaurant near the UO campus and Ciao Pizza near Gateway Mall. Ciao Pizza is more like an Italian trattoria with pasta dishes and classic entrees than just a pizza kitchen.

"Osso buco is one of my favorite dishes to cook and eat," Paparo says. "That's slow-braised veal shank and we serve it on saffron risotto using Arborio rice from Italy flavored with saffron. It's a rich dish and you can drink a little red wine with it. We can pair a dish like this with an Oregon wine, but it's an Italian style of cooking."

On both menus, mushrooms and lots of braised meats take center stage.

"We love our Oregon truffles," he says. "It's a treat to shave a few truffles on a pasta dish or fish or in the risotto. In cold weather, richer food feels better."

Much of the restaurants' produce comes from a 5-acre farm with three large heated greenhouses in Pleasant Hill. They still have beets, carrots, chard, turnips and stored squash in the root cellar. They can offer fresh greens and microgreens year-round. — Vanessa Salvia
